Why is France promoting electric cars?

As is happening in most other countries in Europe, the French government is encouraging the wider use of electric cars through financial incentives to buyers. The rules of engagement are forever changing and the generous headline figures that are often cited are subject to detailed conditions that are sometimes difficult to fulfil.

What is France doing about EV subsidies?

Since mid-2025, the government has moved away from fixed maximum subsidy amounts, instead linking them to the fluctuating prices of energy savings certificates (CEE). These certificates are a cornerstone of France's strategy to promote energy efficiency. Funding for EV subsidies has also transitioned from public budgets to CEE financing.

Which electric cars can get a bonus?

The bonus is exclusively available for the most environmentally friendly electric cars, which must meet strict environmental criteria, weigh less than 2,400 kilograms, and have a purchase price below EUR47,000 (excluding optional extras).
